

The Property

This is a peaceful one bedroom, first floor apartment with off road parking for one car in highly desirable Jericho.

The property comprises one good sized double bedroom with double wardrobe and a light and bright bathroom with bath and integral shower.

The large living and dining area features views over the playing fields and is sectioned off from the fully fitted and very well equipped kitchen. In addition to the available parking are secure bike racks within the gated development.

The apartment is situated just off the main street running through the heart of Jericho with its trendy bars and restaurants.

It is also just a short walk from the city centre, Said Business School, central University buildings and the railway station.

The Area

Jericho has long been described as the Bohemian area of Oxford and is favoured by academics, artists and connoisseurs of fine food and wine. It has many boutique shops and the narrow streets are lined with terraced town cottages and larger houses dating back to the 19c. Many of these properties have been refurbished and are now flats of great character.

Originally an industrial area Jericho grew because of the presence of the Oxford Canal, which arrived in 1790. The Eagle Ironworks, wharves and the Oxford University Press are all based there alongside the Old Radcliffe Infirmary.

Thomas Hardy's Jude the Obscure has a scene set in St Barnabas Church, and it is possible that the suburb nicknamed 'Beersheba' in the novel is actually Jericho. As a homage to Hardy, in 1996, one of Jericho's pubs was renamed Jude the Obscure. The first episode of the long running ITV drama series "Inspector Morse", called "The Dead of Jericho", was partially filmed here, notably Combe Road (which is 'Canal Reach' in the drama). It also featured the exterior of the 'Bookbinders Arms' pub on the corner of Victor Street.
